WISE MEN LOOK FOR UNEXPECTED AT TRACK

By J. W. MARCHBANK

Some time ago a successful trainer now in Florida was racing on the West coast. It was his aim never to send an unfit animal to the post. That he achieved his object was evident from the number of times his horses earned brackets or finished second or third. The purse money mounted high apart from the returns from any speculation in the track books.

Busied with the preparation of the runners in his large string in the early morning hours and in saddling his horses and giving last second instructions to the riders in the afternoon, the trainer left the placing of his modest wagers in the ring to a man in whom he had implicit trust. The commissioner had a good job and helped his employer all he could to come out a winner.

One day the "boss" wanted to bet across the board on a galloper that seemed to have small chance; the commissioner could not help protesting:

"Why your throwing your money away. The horse will be at the sixteenth pole when the contenders are bound under the wire."

Showing his true horsemanship, the owner told his deputy to do as he was instructed, putting his position succinctly:

"You can never tell what will happen in a race; our horse is in there and has a chance."

The stable's horse did win. Luck played a part in the final outcome of the contest, but then what would a race be without the unpredictable incidents comming in every struggle?

That particular owner is imbued with what the "get-rich-quick" fellows at race courses deride as the sporting spirit. He is old fashioned enough to think that if there are, say, eight horses in a race any one of the eight is likely to come down in front. He realizes, no matter how clever conditioners may be and how hard jockeys may try to win on others, that on any particular day one animal, perhaps his own, may find things work out in such a way as to bring him victory. In other words—every race is different.

COUNTY BOARD SENDS MEMBER EAST FOR HELP

Will Seek To Have Coast Highway Included In Federal Coast Defense Highway Program.

At Monday's meeting the County Board of Supervisors voted to send Supervisor Al Witt of First Township and Hugh Pomeroy, advisor to the County Planning Commissioner east to Cleveland in the interests of having the coast highway in this county included in the federal program as a defense highway, so that federal funds can be secured for it. The two delegates authorized were also to proceed from Cleveland to Washington in the interests of county WPA projects.

Club women from every section of the county today appeared at the session in defense of Mrs. Biber, social service superintendent, recommended

VETERANS PICK CANDIDATES FOR BIRTHDAY FETE

San Mateo - Santa Clara Council Selects Daly City Member For Honor

At the regular meeting of the San Mateo-Santa Clara Counties Council held in the De Anza Hotel, Saturday evening of last week, Sister Ethel Dorn of Riesel street, Daly City, past president of Old Glory Auxiliary and past president of the San Mateo-Santa Clara Counties Council, was unanimously chosen to represent this organization in the fourth annual George Washington's Birthday Fete, to be held in San Francisco on February 22.

At the same time the council also unanimously selected Comrade Edward M. Seacord, past department commander, to represent the Council as George Washington.

In order to successfully elect these candidates to this high office it is necessary that their many friends help in collecting votes. We, who are veterans, look upon this Washington's Birthday Fete as a means of raising money for the needy in our vicinity.

License Payments Must Be Made By Last Day Of Month To Avoid Penalty

The motoring public is taking advantage of the longer hours afforded them by the San Francisco Office, 13th and Mission streets, of the Department of Motor Vehicles for buying their 1936 license plates.

Figures presented by Bradford Boyes, San Francisco Manager, show that 498 persons received licenses Friday evening, between 5 p. m. and 9 p. m. Also 279 found it more convenient to apply between 8 and 9 in the morning—before the usual opening hour.

Since the postal card rating is only an approximation of the actual Vehicle License Fee, it is necessary to have accurate description of the automobiles—not only as to make, but also number of cylinders, exact type of body (sedan, 2 or 4 door, deluxe or standard, etc.), engine number and automobile serial number. All these facts should be on your white card (registration certificate) but it will save you time to check them first.

Remember that January 30 is the last day for registration—after that you must pay a penalty equal to the total fee.

CRASHES INTO PARKED AUTO AND LANDS IN PRISON

Driver Of Machine Responsible Charged With Reckless Driving

An auto accident occurred at the intersection of Mission and Flornoy streets at about 1:30 o'clock, Monday morning of this week.

A car owned and operated by Robert Butler, 1200 Clayton street, crashed into the parked car of E. E. Smith, 538 twenty-second street, Oakland.

Butler, who is said to have been drinking, was placed under arrest and charged with reckless driving. His bail was set at $100 by Judge Ellis C. Johnson.

PLAY FULL OF ACTION COMES TO LOCAL HOUSE

Doctor Seeking Rest Runs Into Bandits And Adventure

"Dr. Socrates," the Warner Bros. production in which Paul Muni will open at the Daly City Theater for three days, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, January 26, 27 and 28, is heralded as one of the most powerful dramas in which that star has appeared on the screen.

Muni, in the role of a once famous physician whose nerves have been shattered by the death of his fiancée, tries to bury himself in a small town. In this he is successful until one night a notorious bank bandit forces him at the point of his revolver to dress a wound he had received in a battle with police.

The bandit and his band terrorize the surrounding territory, rob the bank and shoot up the town. Among those injured is a girl who had leaped from the bandit's car.

Muni, who has been dubbed Dr. Socrates by a blustering country doctor, a part played by Robert Barrat, dresses the girl's wounds and takes her to his home.

That same night Dr. Socrates is again held up and taken to the robber hide-out to dress wounds. He recognizes the place, calls for government agents, and by a ruse throws the bandits off their guard, so that the secret service men and their posse are able to capture the stronghold without blowing it up and killing the kidnapped girl.

Ann Dvorak plays the part of the little hitch-hiker with whom Muni falls in love.

"Hands Across the Table," with Carole Lombard and Fred McMurray, is the second attraction.

RUTHLESSLY SELFISH GROUP IS LOSING OUT

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work

If the election for president were held today the Democratic nominee would win by a substantial majority. There is not the least doubt President Roosevelt's popularity with the average man is growing by leaps and bounds. Some of the strength of the chief executive comes from his own acts and utterances and some of it is of the left-handed kind, coming from the mistakes of his avowed enemies.

An unprejudiced observer from another country said not long ago that intelligent business men are just beginning to realize that the clash between agricultural and manufacturing interests is the inevitable result of economic nationalism and the insistence of American manufacturers on maintaining their monopoly of the home market without regard to the interests of either farmers or consumers.

We must have foreign trade; there is no question of the importance of the expansion of trade with other countries. Our surplus products must be exchanged for the surplus products of countries in other parts of the world.

The new farm program, made necessary by the passing of the AAA, will include soil conservation, according to announcement of President Roosevelt himself. The President is against uncontrolled crop production, as it sees in such procedure a new race for short-sighted plowing of the vast area of the Middle West, a return to dust storms and eventually a desert land in that remarkably rich region. At the present session of Congress it is expected the President will seek legislation to carry out ideas along the lines of soil conservation and control production.

As I have mentioned heretofore, President Roosevelt is fortunate in having capable advisers at his command. Right now, of course, he is leaning pretty heavily on Henry Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture. In his pamphlet entitled "America Must Choose" he puts very clearly the alternative between economic internationalism and economic nationalism. He recognizes that the high prohibitive American tariff, long used by some manufacturers to work out selfish ideas, has led to retaliatory tariffs in other countries.

Here are extremely timely words from the pen of Secretary Wallace: "Our surplus problem here in the United States, and the resulting necessity of keeping parts of our fac-

TAG AUTO TODAY TO AVOID HEAVY LICENSE PENALTY

California motorists today were sharply awakened to the fact that they must register their vehicles for 1936 prior to midnight, January 30 or pay 100 per cent penalty in vehicle license fees.

"The new vehicle code definitely sets January 30 as the final day for payment of vehicle license fees," said Ray Ingels, director of motor vehicles, "so there is absolutely no chance for extension of time to avoid heavy penalties."

Immediate attention to 1936 registration is urged by Ingels to avoid last minute rushes and inconveniences for citizens. "Each department branch office, California Highway Patrol office and automobile club reports a slowing up of registrations, so now is the time for the wise motorist to get his plates with least inconvenience," said the director.

stories idle and withdrawing acreage, or of widening foreign markets, or of doing these things in combination, is really part of a world surplus problem."

It is conservatively estimated tariffs should be lowered so that we can receive from abroad another billion dollars' worth of goods each year. That would help in keeping farmers out of the red; in fact, might result in giving them profits somewhat commensurate with those of manufacturers.

Adam Smith, a famous Scotch political economist, in his "Wealth of Nations" developed truths that still hold good, although the book was written many years ago. President Roosevelt, ably assisted by Secretary Wallace and by Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, is laying the foundation of a national economy that would have won the approval of Adam Smith. The recent agreement with the Dominion of Canada is along the line of trying to discover with each country in turn the things which can be exchanged with mutual benefit. As the chief executive says, such economic interchange is the most important item in the foreign policy of the United States.

CITY FATHERS PASS NUMBER OF NEW ORDINANCES

Council Has Busy Session At Regular Meeting Monday Evening

The city council of Daly City met in regular session at the City Hall, Monday evening of this week, with all members present.

Much business was transacted, including the passage of five new ordinances and the introduction of two others.

A communication expressed appreciation of the General Pershing P. T. A., the Woodrow Wilson P. T. A. and the Women's Club for the continuance of supervised play on the school grounds.

The clerk was instructed to answer a letter with reference to the holding of a President's Ball in the county, saying no plans have been made for such an event.

A communication from Old Glory Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, asked the council to instruct the clerk to send communication from the city council by air mail to Senators McAdoo and Johnson and Congressman McGrath, requesting their support of the act for immediate cash payment of Veterans Adjustment Certificates. This action was ordered by the council, with the statement that the council favored such a course.

Fred R. Linser, adjutant of Old Glory Post, said that if the measure was favorably acted upon and the money paid, Veterans in this state will receive about $250,000,000 and $17,000 will be paid to residents of Daly City, which latter amount would practically all be spent with our home merchants.

Old Glory Post requested transfer of title to two building lots, presumably on Wellington avenue, now

40 Famous "First Editions" Are Found to Be Forgeries

The European book-collecting world received a shock recently when about 40 famous "first editions," which have been accepted as genuine in all standard bibliographies for 50 years, were found to be forgeries.

In most of them, either the paper or the type or both did not exist at the time the books were supposed to have been printed. And in some cases the text was taken from revised editions.—Collier's.

Progress of Money

When man hunted in primeval forests, he needed no money or means of exchange of goods. If he had a dog and wanted a sheep, he looked around for some other man who would barter an even exchange. But in a short time it was found that trading was made easier if one could offer in exchange a commodity which was used in several localities, and had the same value in all of them—hence this forerunner of modern money, says Ireland's Own.

Just do what hospitals do, and the doctors insist on. Use a good liquid laxative, and aid Nature to restore clocklike regularity without strain or ill effect.

A liquid can always be taken in gradually reduced doses. Reduced dosage is the real secret of relief from constipation.

Ask a doctor about this. Ask your druggist how very popular Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has become. It gives the right kind of help, and right amount of help. Taking a little less each time, gives the bowels a chance to act of their own accord, until they are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin contains senna and cascara—both natural laxatives that form no habit. The action is gentle, but sure. It will relieve any sluggishness or bilious condition due to constipation without upset.

SYNOPSIS

As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the Far North, a plane lands at the airways emergency station. In it are Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith; and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Believing him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to his samples of platinum-bearing ore as nearly "worthless." Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows contempt for Garth. Through Garth's guidance, the plane soon reaches the claim site. Huxby and Ramill, after making several tests, assure Garth his claim is nearly valueless, but to "encourage" young prospectors they are willing to take a chance in investing a small amount. Sensing treachery ahead, Garth secretly removes a part from the motor of the plane. Huxby and Lilith taunt Garth, but their tone soon changes when they try to start the plane. Returning to shore, they try to force Garth to give up the missing part. Garth manages to set the monoplane adrift and the current carries it over the falls. He points out that he is their only hope in guiding them out of the wilderness. Garth begins the work of preparing for the long journey. He insists that the others help. Ramill and his daughter must be hardened for the hardships ahead in their trek to the outpost on the Mackenzie. Garth experiences difficulties in getting his companions into line. An experience with a bear helps. Returning from a long sleep in the woods, Garth finds the party has stolen the tea and sugar he has been saving for emergencies. He makes no objection, simply pointing out that he is accustomed to a strict meat diet, and that they are hurting only themselves. The work of getting ready for the trip continues. Huxby refuses to help, and works on the mining claim. Garth stores food in an ice cave.

"You'll have two more days for it," Garth told him. "Only don't forget that an alloy of platinum and gold weighs more than lead. You'll be taking my 60 per cent. along with the 40 for yourself and Mr. Ramill. If you hit the lot in your pockets, you'll go down like a shot, first time you slip into a muskeg pool or quagmire. Think of the all-around calamity that would mean. You'd lose your life, Mr. Ramill would lose his Man Friday, Miss Lilith her fiancé, and I—I'd lose my 60 per cent."

Mr. Ramill interposed: "It's no joke, Vivian. I've seen a strong swimmer sunk by the gold in his money-belt. A bag can be thrown off the shoulders. Another thing, Garth is to receive his three-fifths of whatever you have panned out. That is understood."

"It was his bargain," Huxby replied. "He went to gorge on the leg of caribou that Garth had roasted over the fire on a twist-thong of rawhide. When he could eat no more, he hastened back to the placer trough to resume his panning."

The others had already feasted upon the tender venison, that was self-basted in its delicious fat. Lilith and her father had helped Garth pack it, with more meat and the skins, down the long slope from the glacier.

Before sundown, Garth set several rawhide snares, each attached to a pair of downbeat saplings. For bait, he used raw pieces of caribou flesh. The beasts of the valley had never been trapped. When, at sunrise, he went the rounds of his snares, he collected a lynx, two red foxes, a wolverine, and a wolf.

Garth did not reset the snares. He had more skins than he needed. From the wolf-hide he made a knapsack for Huxby. The fox skins furnished smaller bags for Mr. Ramill and Lilith.

At the second sunrise, Garth bundled the lynx and wolverine pelts and a quantity of catgut with the caribou skins.

Huxby eyed the bundle ironically. "Mr. Ramill told me about your caribou parka talk. I take it, you aim to go back and live among the Eskimos."

"I might do worse," Garth replied. "There's your wolf parka. Load our metal, and slant up from the placer. We'll meet you at the glacier."

At Mr. Ramill's nod, the engineer took the knapsack and started off. Garth put the small aluminum pot and the tin cup in the millionaire's bag. He drew his blanket from the leanto to strap it on his pack-board with the bundle of skins.

Lilith Ramill crept into the leanto for the last time. She came out with the pouches of salt and tea. Neither had been opened since Garth put them in her care, after the wasteful eating up of the sugar.

Her worn boots lay at the foot of the leanto. She had on her moose-hide moccasins and lynx-skin leggings. As she backed from under the low roof she picked up the boots and eyed them with amused contempt. They had been fit only for show, not for use. But when she flung them down, Garth added them to his pack, along with the last small pieces of the moose hides.

"We might sew on rawhide soles," he said. "Now—all set. How about you, mates? Ready to hit the trail?" The girl showed the whisky flask that he had left in her father's care. It was full of fly dope—spruce pitch mixed with caribou tallow. She put the flask into her foxskin bag, along with the pouches of tea and salt. Mr. Ramill was already walking off.

Garth had made a tump-line for his pack. As he fitted the band across his forehead and stood up, rifle in hand, he glanced over his shoulder at the girl.

She turned and met his glance. Her lips curled in their old scornful smile. "What are you waiting for? Aren't we ever to get out of this beastly valley?"

He started off without any reply but with a glow of exultance under his outward show of indifference. Lilith Ramill thought she was about to escape from the Wild.

He had promised to guide them all to the Mackenzie. The probabilities were now in favor of even her father making it. The girl would go back to what she called civilization—to luxury and self-indulgence, to jazz and night-clubs—the rapid pursuit of sensation.

Yet a part of her would linger behind in this lost valley of the desolate subarctic Rockies. She had eaten of wild meat; she had smelled the tang of smoke from man's first friend, the camp fire. She had come face to face with the Primitive—and had lived it.

The real woman of her had awakened—had thrust aside the superficial self whose world was made up of artificiality and dissipation. She had been compelled to face the raw realities of life. And there were weeks more of it to come.

Fortunately, she had already been hard. Now she was fit. Under the smear of mosquito dope, the lines had smoothed from her face. The drawn look had disappeared. Instead of the scarlet of rouge, her lips were cherry red with healthy natural color. She had gained weight. Her body now looked lean rather than emaciated.

As Garth overtook the girl's father, he eyed him with a smaller yet no less genuine satisfaction. For every pound gained by the daughter, the father had been rid of three or more. Though still far from hard, the millionaire had worked and sweat into vastly better condition than at the start of his training.

Huxby did not come into sight, out of the placer trough, until the others were well up the tundra slope, half-way to the glacier. That gave Garth an excuse to tell Lilith to ease her father along while Huxby was closing up with them.

Garth himself swung briskly ahead. So far, nothing had been said to Huxby about the cache cave in the ice tunnel of the glacier stream. He knew only that the caribou carcasses had been put on ice.

The one thing of which Garth felt most certain regarding the engineer was that he would never give over trying to get the platinum placer until every possible scheme had been balked. Mr. Ramill might quit. He already possessed a fortune.

But Huxby was still a relatively poor man, and he had now made certain that the placer was worth at least a million dollars. Behind his polished front, he was no less unscrupulous than his millionaire partner, and he was absolutely cold-blooded.

Among the cards that the future was to deal in the game, the ice cave might prove to be anything from a two-spot to an ace. If the play should shift back to the valley, a cache full of meat would most benefit the player who knew about it. No less so, the caribou skins. In any event, it would do no harm and might prove of advantage to leave Huxby in doubt regarding the location of the cache.

Lilith made the last climb to Garth without effort. But Huxby plodded up almost as winded as Mr. Ramill. He lowered from his shoulders the small but heavy load in his wolfskin knapsack. The chunks of frozen caribou meat beside the bulky blanket-wrapped bundle on Garth's packboard drew his displeased attention.

"You can't expect me to carry any of that venison. I'm no pack jack of the woods. Forty pounds is quite enough to suit me."

Garth hefted the wolfskin sack. "My guess is forty-five. Figuring roughly, that makes forty-one troy pounds, or four, ninety-two troy ounces. Call it five hundred even. Platinum is around sixty dollars an ounce troy. The values of the alloy will average at least thirty. That gives us a total of say, fifteen thousand dollars. Not so bad for a few days' panning."

Huxby's face showed that this was no news to him. For all his cool self-control, his fingers clutched tight hold of the wolfskin as he drew it out of Garth's careless grasp.

Ever since coming into the valley he had spent the greater part of every long day scratching spots all over the great placer claim and panning samples of the gravel. Fifteen thousand dollars was no fortune. But if a few score handfuls of grassroot dirt could yield that amount, there could be no doubt of the vast treasure beneath. Even if bedrock lay at a shallow depth, the platinum placer was worth at least a million dollars.

Though Garth smiled at the engineer's betrayal of cupidity, he took note of it as an additional warning. He had said that Huxby was a commonplace wolf. But any wolf is apt to be deadly when ravenous.

Garth's sideward glance caught an amused twinkle in Mr. Ramill's shrewd eyes. The hard training had put the millionaire in better health than he probably had enjoyed for many years. Also, his mind was bigger and better poised than that of his prospective son-in-law. He could smile with Garth over Huxby's obsession—smile and put aside all thought of the placer until in a position to take it from its discoverer.

Lilith saw the situation from a still different angle. She opened the wolfskin sack to peer inside. At sight of the nodules, she dropped the flap, with a look of disgust. Mere value meant nothing to her. The alloy looked dull and uninteresting.

"Worth only fifteen thousand dollars," she bantered her fiancé. "You've dug dirt all this time for a trifle like that, and lugged it all the way up here. Don't tell me you're so dumb that you plan to pack it for the weeks Alan says we'll need to get back to the Mackenzie. Forty-five pounds of that stuff—how silly! From what Alan told us, we may have all we can do to carry ourselves on this cross-country hike."

"With my blanket and the meat that's in it, I'm starting off with something like two hundred pounds," Garth said. "Game was scarce on the other side of the pass when I went out the other time. The weight of our metal in meat may be worth more than the fifteen thousand dollars. Let Huxby choose which he prefers to pack."

The engineer compromised by shoving one of the twenty-pound chunks of caribou meat into the sack, on top of the metal. This left a second chunk of equal weight. Lilith bent over to put it in her own sack.

"Lay off," said Garth. "It is his choice. Besides, frozen meat soon spoils when it thaws. Fall into Indian file. Here goes."

"Alan Garth, You're a Man."

He backed up to his boulder-perched pack, slipped the tump-line over his forehead, and started up the great cleft as if his 200-pound pack weighed no more than Huxby's 65 pounds of meat and metal.

He halted only when the other men were compelled to stop for breath. Huxby, though carrying a load only a third the weight of Garth's, had soon begun to strain and puff as hard as Mr. Ramill. He was larger than Garth and seemingly stronger-muscled. But he lacked Garth's wind and endurance and the knack of back-packing. At every halt he sank down on the ice or a moraine stone, panting.

Garth merely eased his back-breaking pack upon a boulder, slipped the tump-line from his forehead, and waited for the other men to recover. Lilith Ramill's pack was too light to hamper her. She climbed with the agility of a goat.

In places the pitch of the glacier became too steep for ordinary climbing. Garth had to draw his belt-ax and chop foot holds. The last of these steep rises was far up towards the head of the pass.

The remaining distance to the summit was not so steep, and there were no dangerous crevasses. Garth made the climb at a swinging pace. He was halfway down before he met Huxby plodding slowly upwards with Mr. Ramill. The engineer looked at him with cold-eyed rancor.

Mr. Ramill panted a wistful question: "Wh-when-do we—eat?"

"At the top. Take your time." Lilith had chosen to wait for Garth down where he had left them all. His pack lay on the snow below the boulder upon which he had set it. She pointed her slender finger at the fallen bundle.

"I tried to find out if you were lying about the weight. I couldn't even lift one end. But you see how the top of the stone slopes. The beastly thing slid off."

"That's all right, Miss Ramill. Easy enough to up-end it again."

"Easy!" Her blue eyes glowed with an odd light. "You carried Dad back to camp that day. But it was downhill. Now—to pack this frightful load all the way up here! Alan Garth, you're a man!"

"Well, it's a bit of a stiff pull-up," he admitted. "But we'll soon make the downslope. I left the knife on the knapsack. Go up and slice that caribou meat."

The girl whom her own father could not command met the order with a cheerful nod. She started briskly off up the gap. Garth's steady climbing brought him to the top of the pass a few paces behind Huxby and Mr. Ramill. Lilith was sprinkling salt on slices of the raw meat.

The pass was barren even of caribou moss. The meat had to be eaten cold or uncooked, or not at all. Six hours had passed since the party left the camp in the valley bottom. After the long, hard climb, even the girl was hungry enough to have eaten rawhide. The caribou meat was tender, and the first taste of salt since the party had come to the valley turned the meal into a feast.

Less than half of the 20-pound chunk of caribou remained by the time even Mr. Ramill found he could eat no more.

All were so refreshed by the food and rest that no one objected when Garth gave the word to start on. There would be no more slogging up-hill, with lungs bellowing for air. One would only have to hold back.

But that was the rub—the holding back. The south side of the pass was far steeper than the north, and there was no glacier to offer stretches or smooth footing. The bed of the sharply tilted cleft frequently dropped over small cliffs. Between these high ledges were slides of frost-shattered rocks. Patches of ice here and there made the footing doubly treacherous.

In places Garth had to drop his pack down before him. Not infrequently, even Lilith had to be given a hand down slippery chutes, or caught in Garth's upraised arms when Huxby lowered her off the edge of a sharp drop. Still oftener, her father had to be helped by both Garth and Huxby.

Shovel-Tusked Elephants

Used Big Jaws as Dredge

Nature never made any real mechanical steamshovels except indirectly through her agent, man, but 20,000-000 years ago, before the Gobi desert had reached its present barrenness and before man had put in his appearance on earth, she had a creation far more remarkable. It was an animated dredge—a great elephant whose tusks had taken the form of shovels extending from a scoop-like lower jaw. These mastodonts dredged the muddy bottoms of prehistoric swamps for water lilies and other swamp growths which formed their food. It has been several years since their fossils were first discovered in the Gobi desert, but interest has reverted to them through the discovery and identification of plant fossils which prove that swamps existed in the Gobi during their time—a fact previously doubted and which doubt raised a question as to these animals' food and the purpose of their shovel tusks. This doubt, however, is now cleared. Other discoveries have shown that these long-extinct elephants also lived in America and dredged the swamps of California, Nebraska, and Kansas.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Spiders and Stars

Spiders' webs have many uses. Without them astronomers would find it harder to make accurate observations. The eye pieces of their telescopes are marked into sections by very fine lines, which are really pieces of web held in place by spots of varnish. Webs are used because it is impossible to have finer as well as equally distinct lines by any other method. There are other uses, too, for webs. An instrument maker in York employs a man specially to collect spiders and webs. Only a special kind of spider is caught, the "eperla drademata," which is usually found on gorse bushes and has a cross on its back. The spiders are made to wind their webs on special forks, each insect winding about 40 feet before the supply gives out. These webs are used in the manufacture of the most delicate types of scientific instruments.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Animal Prophets

A pit-horse at Markham colliery proved wiser than the man who drove it, says Tit-Bits Magazine. Suddenly, for no apparent reason, the horse, which had worked underground for seven years, bolted and refused to return. When its driver returned alone, the roof fell on him almost immediately. Animals often sense danger and the authorities in England know, for instance, that pit-horses are aware of danger long before the miners. Not long ago, a New Forest dog pulled its master from under the radius of an old oak, which crashed a few seconds after he reached safety. In Burma, where elephants carry logs, one of these beasts refused to cross a certain bridge with its load. Eventually the logs were loaded on carts and dragged by bullocks, but the bridge collapsed when they were halfway across.

40 Famous "First Editions" Are Found to Be Forgeries

The European book-collecting world received a shock recently when about 40 famous "first editions," which have been accepted as genuine in all standard bibliographies for 50 years, were found to be forgeries.

In most of them, either the paper or the type or both did not exist at the time the books were supposed to have been printed. And in some cases the text was taken from revised editions.—Collier's.

Happy Children

If takes so little to make a child happy, that it is a pity, in a world full of sunshine and pleasant things, that there should be any wistful faces, empty hands, or lonely young hearts.

The Man Who Knows

Whether the Remedy You are taking for Headaches, Neuralgia or Rheumatism Pains is SAFE is Your Doctor. Ask Him

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains... and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

THERE'S NOTHING WRONG WITH AMERICA

William Randolph Hearst takes a vicious slap at North America on the front pages of his newspapers when he comments on the departure of the Lindberghs for England, where the famous aviator will live to escape kidnap threats to his second son.

Arthur Brisbane goes even further, saying that Lindbergh should retire to Scandinavia, "where he would meet people who know how to be cold without being offensive and serious without pretentiousness."

Castigation of North America comes with poor grace from William Randolph Hearst, who, for personal reasons, is the avowed enemy of France and the bitter critic of England.

If Mr. Hearst, who hates Europe, has also turned against his own country, what nation is there left for this amazing gentleman to love?

Probably the great newspaper tycoon will only be satisfied when he becomes a citizen of the Great Beyond.

The fact is that in spite of all the kidnapping and crime and violence and crudity, there is nothing wrong with America.

The trouble lies with the Hearsts who have contributed to the debauchery of American political and judicial life and the Lindberghs who have become too high and mighty to go through the social pioneering necessary to a New World.

If Mr. Hearst finds himself in grief over the criminality of his country, he should shed a few tears for himself, who helped to make it so.

Twisting and distorting news, feeding his public hate-inflaming propaganda and preaching the lowest kind of expediency in political affairs, Mr. Hearst has definitely debased American standards of behavior.

There's nothing wrong with America. But there's a great deal wrong with America's Hearsts.

So far as Lindbergh is concerned, the North American public will have much sympathy for him. He has suffered a great personal sorrow. And much has happened in his career that has been personally distasteful to him.

But when he runs away from it, he is not exhibiting the spirit that carried him alone over the Atlantic.

When the early pioneers came into Ontario, for instance, the wolves killed their cattle, the bears destroyed their provisions and their children drowned in swamps.

Had these pioneers said, "This is a terrible country. I'm going back to Britain," there would have been no Ontario.

But they did not say that. They stuck. They put up with misfortune and triumphed over it.

Well, this whole continent is in a pioneering stage, socially. And unless the good, solid citizens, like the Lindberghs, stick it out and lay claim to it and purify it, it will continue to belong to the social wolves and be infested with the undrained swamps of crime.

However, we appreciate the fact that Anne Lindbergh has experienced a great sorrow. We can understand her yearning for a country of greater social security. It is such a highly personal choice that it is beyond criticism.

Nevertheless, we dislike to see this fine, great continent damned by the departure of splendid citizens and by the hypocritical caterwauling of men like William Randolph Hearst.

We repeat, there is nothing wrong with America.

Only we need citizens who will stick out our pioneering years, and leaders, newspaper and otherwise, who will refine and elevate public sentiment instead of inflaming and degrading it.

North America is the greatest continent on any earth if we could only make ourselves be worthy of it.—Vancouver Sun.

WEEKLY BULLETIN

FIRE PREVENTION (Paying For Fires)

By Chief A. P. Chesney

Each day, on the average, the people of the United States pay to the "Fire Demon" a tribute of over one and a half million dollars. During the year 1926 fire losses amounted to $561,980,751, yet the American people as a whole utter no word of protest. This sum is being added to and enlarged each year.

This tremendous sum is sufficient to maintain and operate the entire Navy Department for four years. It is seven times more than all the United States gold and silver which was exported in that year, and three times more than the amount which was imported. Twenty-eight first line battleships, costing $20,000,000 each, could be built with this amount and still have almost $2,000,000 left. It could build or buy and pay cash in full for 80,283 modern, one family suburban homes, housing 482,000 people—a city of residences the size of Washington, D. C., and larger than the three cities, Albany, N. Y.; Atlanta, Ga., and Salt Lake City, Utah, combined.

More on this side of the fire question next week.

RELIGION IN THE NEWS

(By Rev. Miles Dawson)

Henry Citizen too often sits back at ease because he is not aware of the foul play within his country's borders. Walter S. Steele, editor of National Republic, laid before Congress these facts which should stir many sleeping Americans:

1—There are six times as many members in the Communist party and its affiliated movements in the United States today as there were in Russia at the time of the Bolshevik revolution.

2—There are twice as many members in Communist and affiliated movements as there are at present in the Communist Party of Russia.

3—There are over 610 national communist and affiliated organizations, with thousands of state and local branches, in the United States today.

4—There are over 300 communist newspapers and magazines printed in all languages.

5—There are millions of books and pamphlets issued on subversive subjects in the United States annually.

6—The schools and colleges and the summer camps are permeated with revolutionary teaching.

7—It is estimated that communist forces expend over six million dollars annually in the United States to foment, strikes, engender class hatred and promote civil war, leading to the overthrow of our government so as to seize power and establish a Soviet America.

Arno C. Gaebelein, commenting upon this article said, "Communism is a foreign, malignant substance in the very intestines of American life and institutions. This cancer is growing. And still we do nothing about it. It is not chauvinistic to warn a man that he had better look to his health. It is a desire to preserve and save."

The accident occurred when Cutler, attempting to turn his car around, jumped the curb into the street car right of way. Unable to extricate the auto, he jumped out and attempted to hail the oncoming street car. The motorman applied the brakes, but was unable to stop before striking the auto.

NEW FINANCE PLAN NOW MAKES PURCHASE EASY

Best Terms And Small Interest Rates Will Help Buyers

Creating a sensation in motor circles here and throughout the state, Ford Motor Company's announcement that purchasers could now buy the new Ford V-8 for as little as $25 a month, with the balance carried at the low financing rate of 6 per cent interest, has been the principal topic of conversation among local automobile dealers recently.

"This means that most employed people can now own and drive a new Ford V-8 automobile on these low financing terms. The low monthly payment plan makes it possible for hundreds of people, who have heretofore had to be content with cheap used cars, to buy new Ford automobiles," said A. J. Bertini local Ford dealer.

"In this new sales plan the Ford Motor Company has again led the way toward making the 'Universal Car' available to everybody. For many years it has been the established policy of the Ford Motor Company and Henry Ford to serve the masses. Its many quality car features have marked it truly as a car without a price class.

"Now Ford takes another step forward with his new and improved Ford V-8 for 1936. But not only has the car itself been again improved, even over the high 1935 standards, but now it is made easily available to a much wider circle of owners due to the new and revolutionary low monthly term plan with its easy six per cent financing charges. This is a service to the mass of buyers and is in line with the Ford policy of serving the public."

Dealers predict that 1936 will see Ford in an increasingly dominant position in the low priced field, where last year the car led all makes in sales by a wide margin.

KEEP PLATES TIGHT

When license plates are attached to the cross bar in front of the radiator the clamps should be drawn up tight.

If the clamps are loose, wind pressure when the car is traveling fast forces the plate against the radiator. Many radiators are damaged in this way.

LOCAL TAXES

P. G. and E. PAYS MILLIONS TO CITIES AND TO COUNTIES

We have paid the first installment of our 1935-36 tax bill to local subdivisions of government throughout the territory we serve. The total for the year will be approximately $7,000,000.

Every city and county and every school district receives a share of this amount. The first payments ranged from $1,262,137.29 to the City and County of San Francisco, to lesser amounts in smaller communities.

UTILITY TAXES RELIEVE PRIVATE PROPERTY

Under the Riley-Stewart Act, which repealed the State tax upon the gross revenues of public utilities, the property of this Company is now assessed and taxed by local governments in the same manner as all other property.

Restoration of utility property to general taxation gives to every local government a substantial increase in tax revenue and thus relieves other property of part of its tax load. In San Francisco, for example, the P. G. and E.'s tax payments for the year represent 20 cents of the tax rate.

LARGEST TAXPAYER IN 28 COUNTIES

In addition to being the largest taxpayer in California, this Company now becomes the largest taxpayer in each of 28 counties of the State—more deeply concerned than ever with the responsibilities of citizenship in each community it serves.

P. G. and E. Taxes

Here are some of the first installments paid to City and County tax collectors:

San Francisco, City and County . . .	$1,011,979.31
San Francisco, City and County . . .	250,157.90

BUSINESS OUTLOOK FOR AUTO INDUSTRY

With automobile sales climbing steadily toward new highs, the manager of the Mission Auto Company, Chrysler-Plymouth dealer, yesterday commented on the outlook for the current year.

"Automobile manufacturers may look forward to a highly prosperous year in 1936," he said. "The need for replacement of old cars has been growing more and more acute during the past few years. In fact, during the next twelve months, approximately one-third of all motor cars in the United States will be seven or more years old."

"Naturally, the increased buying power which has been reflected in all lines of business, will result in the replacement of a large majority of these 'ancient vintage' automobiles. Too, people are becoming more conscious of the greater safety offered in the modern motor car. The safety all-steel body; lowered center of gravity; the use of safety glass and interlocking frames and bodies are a few of the features found in the advanced motor car."

"A large number of these developments to increase safety have been pioneered by Walter P. Chrysler. Chrysler was the first car to use hydraulic brakes; the first manufacturer to develop scientific weight distribution and was largely responsible for the development of the present steel body and method of interlocking the body with the frame."

for removal by the grand jury. The supervisors heard the jury's recommendation for Mrs. Biber's removal and arguments in her defense, and refused to take any action, holding that under the charter they had no authority.

The recommendation of the grand jury was referred to County Executive Walter T. Kellogg and Major Charles C. Gans, health director and Mrs. Biber's immediate superior, for investigation and whatever action they deemed advisable.

County Engineer Marshall was designated as this county's engineering representative for Joint Highway Districts No. 9 and No. 10. The board transferred $24,000 from the Ocean Shore highway fund raised by taxes in this county to the state to be used in construction of the road around Pedro Mountain, San Francisco was asked to contribute its share at once.

Objection to acceptance of dog track money for improvements at Community Hospital, filed with the supervisors by the San Mateo County Federation of Women's clubs, started a heated discussion in which representatives of women's clubs seemed to be sharply at variance. The Bayshore track has offered $5,000 to the hospital, and the federation objected to the acceptance of "gambling" funds by the county.

After considerable discussion, the board decided to accept the proffered funds.

The supervisors decided its members should attend a meeting of supervisors from all over the state in Sacramento, January 18 for tax discussion.
